What keeps it ranking

The monthly work

One of three things happens tonight.

If you're an HVAC contractor in west Georgia and somebody in Douglasville types "AC repair near me" into their phone tonight, one of three things happens. You show up in the three listings on the map. You show up somewhere under them. Or you don't show up and they call whoever does.

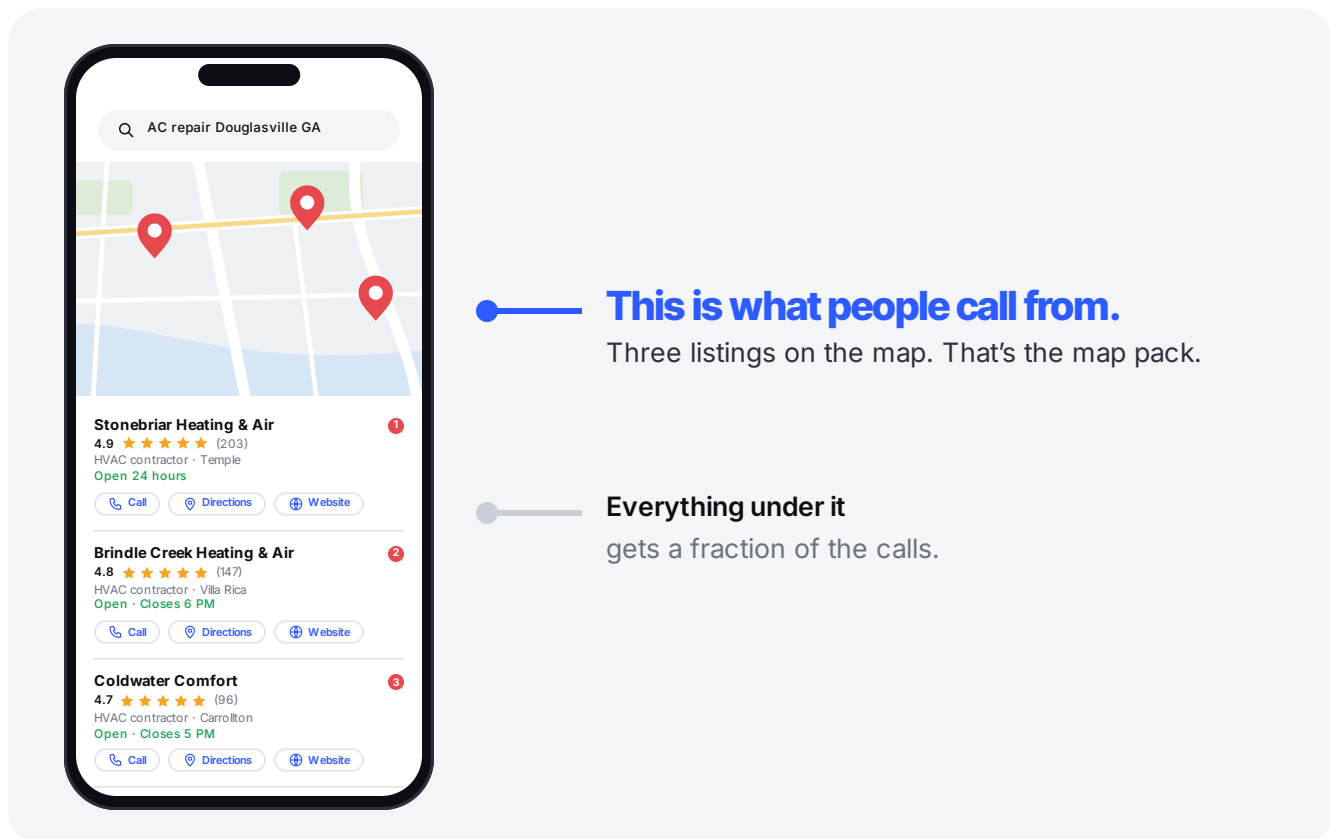

Fig. 02 The map pack for "AC repair Douglasville GA." The top three get the calls.

Most HVAC owners I talk to think that's a website problem. It isn't. That map comes from your Google Business Profile, and for an AC search that's what people call from. So before you spend a dime on a website or an ad, the profile has to be right. Have it right before the first 90-degree week, when the searches spike.

The profile is free and it's yours. The ones I pull up usually have one category, no services listed, a handful of old photos, and reviews that stopped months ago. That's no knock on you. You're in an attic all day. Nobody said it mattered.

WHAT YOU NEED

Google

Signed in on your phone

Your camera

For photos and one short video

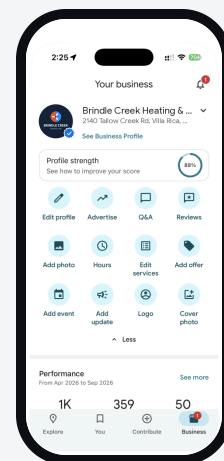

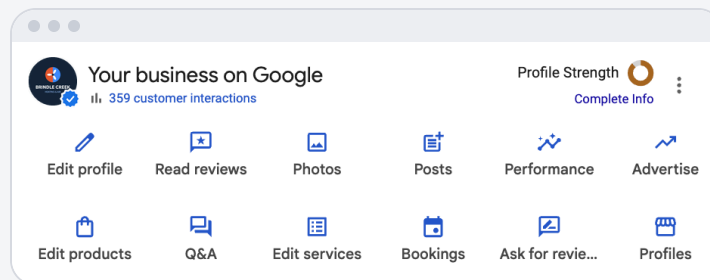

Your last 20 customers

Names and cell numbers

This playbook is seven days, about ten minutes a day, from your phone. You need Google, your camera, and a list of your last twenty customers. By Sunday your profile will be claimed, filled out the way Google wants it, loaded with real job photos, and you'll have asked for your first ten reviews with a text I wrote for you.

Two ways in, same buttons

Search your company name in Google while signed in and the owner panel shows above your listing. Or open the Google Maps app, tap Business in the bottom right, and you're on a screen called "Your business." Both have Edit profile, Q&A, Reviews, Add photo, Hours, Edit services, Add update, Logo, Cover photo, and Performance. If you only see four buttons in the app, tap "More."

Two ways in. Same buttons either way.

Slow is the whole trick

Do the days in order, one a day. Google watches how fast a profile changes, and one that goes from empty to stuffed in an hour can get flagged and suspended. Slow is the whole trick.

What this won't do is keep itself up. A profile goes stale in about a month if nobody posts to it and the reviews stop. I'll show you the ongoing work at the end. You decide whether that's you or us.

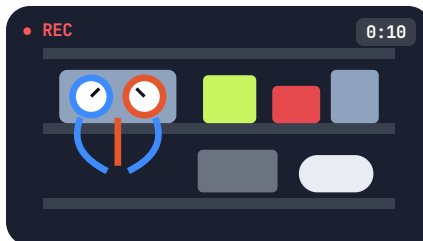

1 Claim it and fix the name

Google only ranks a verified profile, and it suspends profiles with stuffed names. A remodeler we audited in Florida shares his company name with a landscaper in the same town. Search the name and the landscaper comes up. Nobody had claimed the remodeler's profile, so as far as Google knows he doesn't exist. The name on the van is the name on the profile, and it has to be claimed.

- 1 Open Google on your phone. Sign in to a Google account you'll keep for years.
- 2 Search your company name. Look for "Own this business?" under the listing and tap it.
- 3 Not listed? Open Google Maps, tap your profile picture, then "Add your business."
- 4 Google will probably ask for a video. HVAC companies almost always get this now.
- 5 Record it live, in the flow, at least 30 seconds. Show the van lettering, your gauges, and you.

The van. Lettering readable, name on the side.

Your gauges. Pan across the gauges and tools inside the van.

You. Face on camera, say the business name.

📹 Record live inside the flow • 30 seconds minimum • no cuts, no uploads

Fig. 05 What Google wants to see in the verification video.

- 6 Google can take five business days to check it. Start Day 2 anyway.
- 7 Open Edit profile. Set the name to exactly what's on your van and your license.
- 8 Set the primary category to "HVAC contractor." Save.

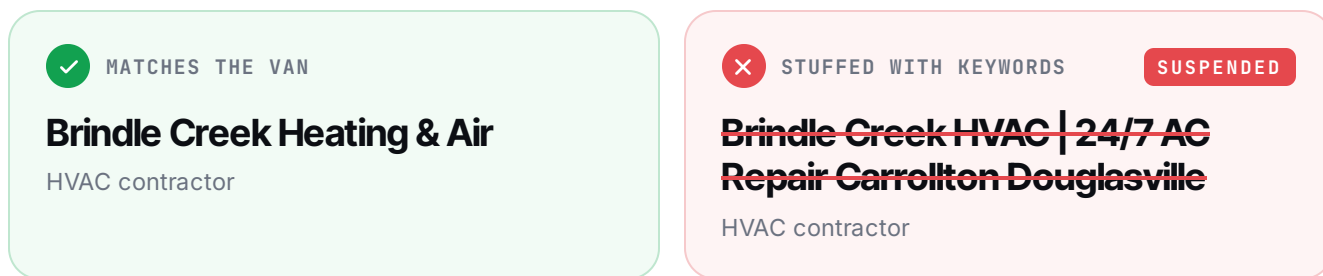

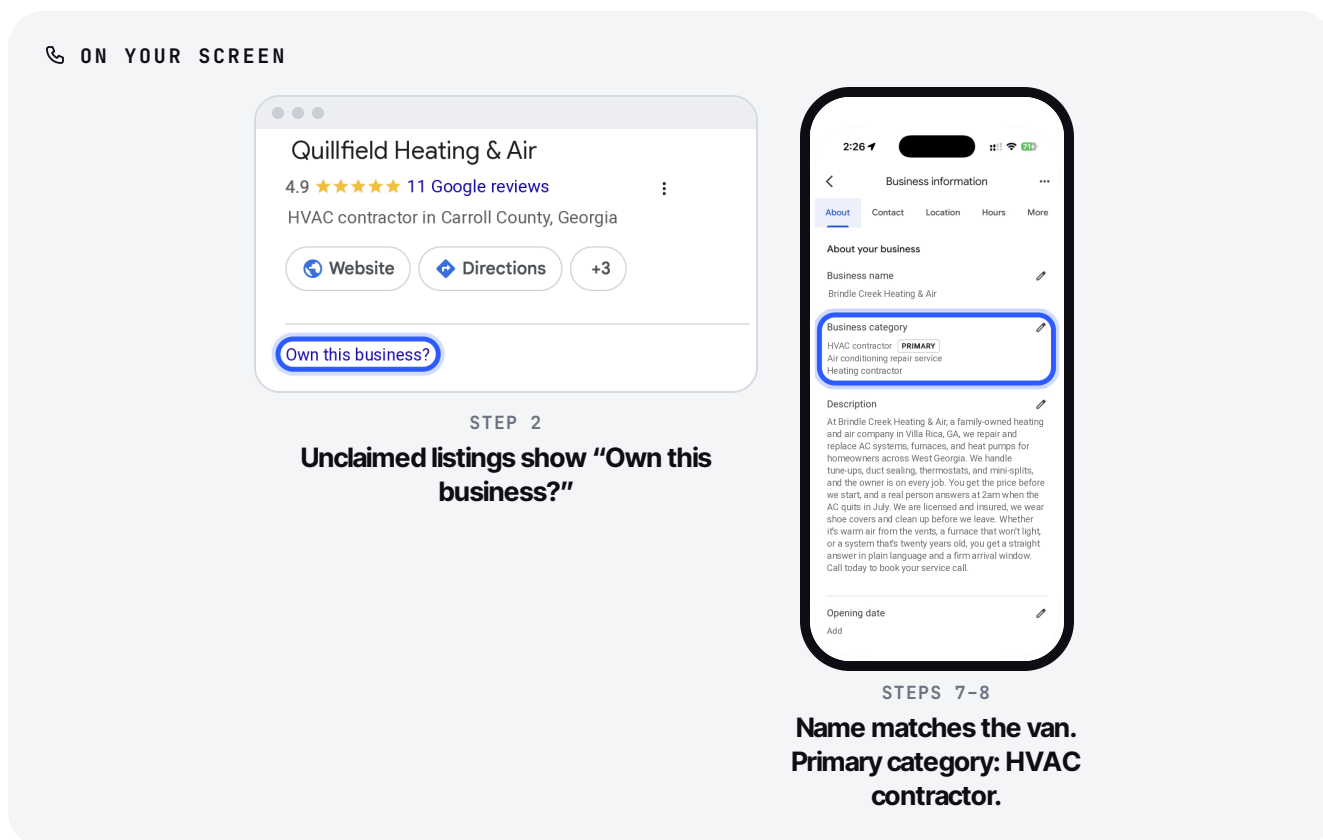

Fig. 07 Same company, two names. Only one survives Google's review.

DO THIS NOW

Claim or verify the profile. Name matches the van. Primary category is "HVAC contractor."

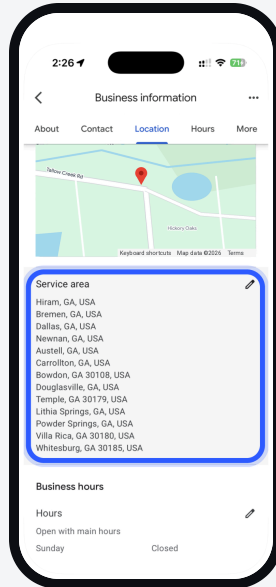

How you know it worked. Searching your name signed in shows "Edit profile" above the listing.

2 Where you work, when, and how to reach you

Google matches your service area to the searcher's town, so a blank area costs you calls in the towns you actually work. A mobile detailer we audited south of Atlanta listed three different home towns on Google, Facebook, and his own site. Google can't tell which one to rank him in, so it hedges on all three.

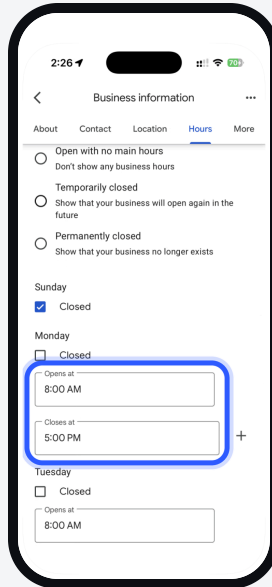

- 1 Open Edit profile, then Location.
- 2 If customers don't come to your address, clear it. Google requires that if you work out of the house.
- 3 Add service areas by town or zip, up to 20. No radius. Stay inside about two hours' drive.
- 4 Set hours to when a human answers the phone. "Open 24 hours" is only true if you pick up at 2am. If it goes to voicemail after ten, don't claim it.
- 5 Add one phone number, the one you answer. Same number on your van, site, and Facebook.
- 6 Add your website. None? Leave it blank or link your Facebook page for now.
- 7 If your profile offers a text or WhatsApp option, turn it on only if you'll answer within the hour.
- 8 Add secondary categories only for work you sell: "Air conditioning repair service," "Heating contractor."

ON YOUR SCREEN

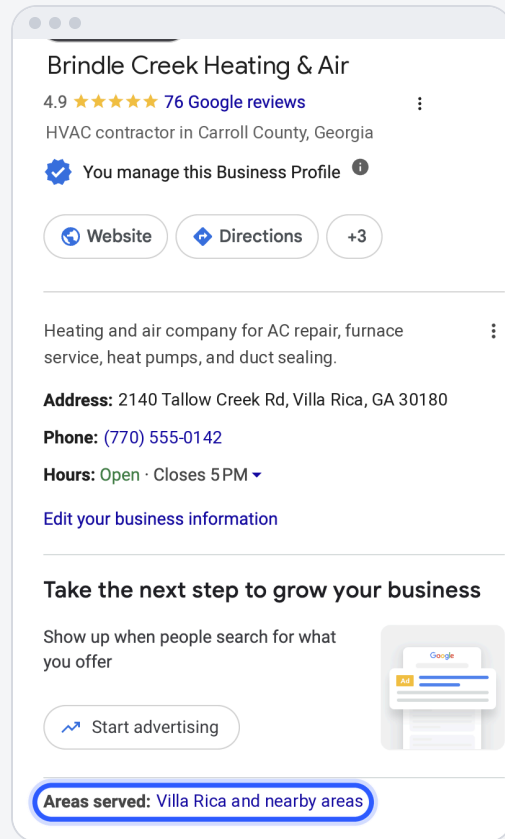

STEPS 2-3

Your towns go under Service area.

STEP 4

Real hours. Sunday closed is fine.

THE RESULT

Your service towns show right on the listing.

DO THIS NOW

Address hidden, service towns listed, real hours, one phone number, website or blank.

How you know it worked. Your listing shows "Serves [your towns]" instead of a street address.

3 The services list and the description

The services list decides which searches you belong in. On a roofer we manage in Douglasville, Google built a review filter out of the words “insurance claim” because that’s what his customers keep writing. It will do the same on your profile with “AC.” That’s Google telling you, in public, what people want. Your services list should say it first.

- 1 Open Edit profile, then Services.
- 2 Add every suggested service you actually do. AC repair and replacement, furnace repair, heat pumps, tune-ups, duct sealing, thermostats, mini-splits.
- 3 Add custom services in a homeowner’s words: “AC not cooling,” “New AC unit,” “Mini-split install.”
- 4 Add a real “from” price where you can. “AC diagnostic: from $89.” “AC replacement: from $4,500.”
- 5 One plain sentence under each. “Most replacements done in a day.”
- 6 Now the description. 750 characters max. The first 250 show, so the town and the work come first.
- 7 Use this and change the brackets. Only list towns you drive to.

DESCRIPTION TEMPLATE

Copy, then change the brackets

[Company] is a licensed heating and air company in [Town], Georgia. We handle AC repair and replacement, furnace repair, heat pumps, tune-ups, and ductwork for homeowners in [Town], [Town], and the rest of [County] County. Licensed and insured, [number] years in the trade, and the owner is on every job. You get the price before we start. Call [phone] and a person picks up.

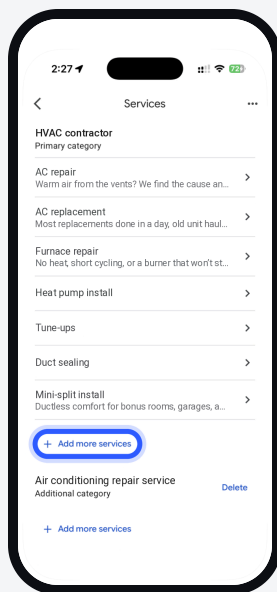

From the business

Brindle Creek Heating & Air is a licensed heating and air company in Villa Rica, Georgia. We handle AC repair and replacement, furnace repair, heat pumps, tune-ups, and ductwork for homeowners in Villa Rica, Temple, and the rest of Carroll County. | Licensed and insured, 12 years in the trade, and the owner is on every job. STEP 6

750 characters max. The town and the work go in the first 250.

DO THIS NOW

Eight or more services, prices where you can. Description saved.

How you know it worked. "Services" appears as its own tab on your listing with your list in it.

4 Twenty photos, a logo, and a cover

Google favors profiles with recent, real photos, and homeowners pick HVAC companies the same way. A stock photo of a man in a clean uniform tells them nothing. Your guy in an attic in Temple tells them everything.

- 1 Open your profile, then Photos. Add them in this order.
- 2 Crew (4): on a job, in an attic, brazing lines, cleanup.
- 3 Vans (3): lettered vans from the side, in a driveway, at the supply house.
- 4 Before and after (6): rusted unit and its replacement, an air handler swap, a thermostat upgrade, same angle each time.
- 5 Finished work (5): five installs, shot clean and level.
- 6 You (2): in front of the van, and on a job.

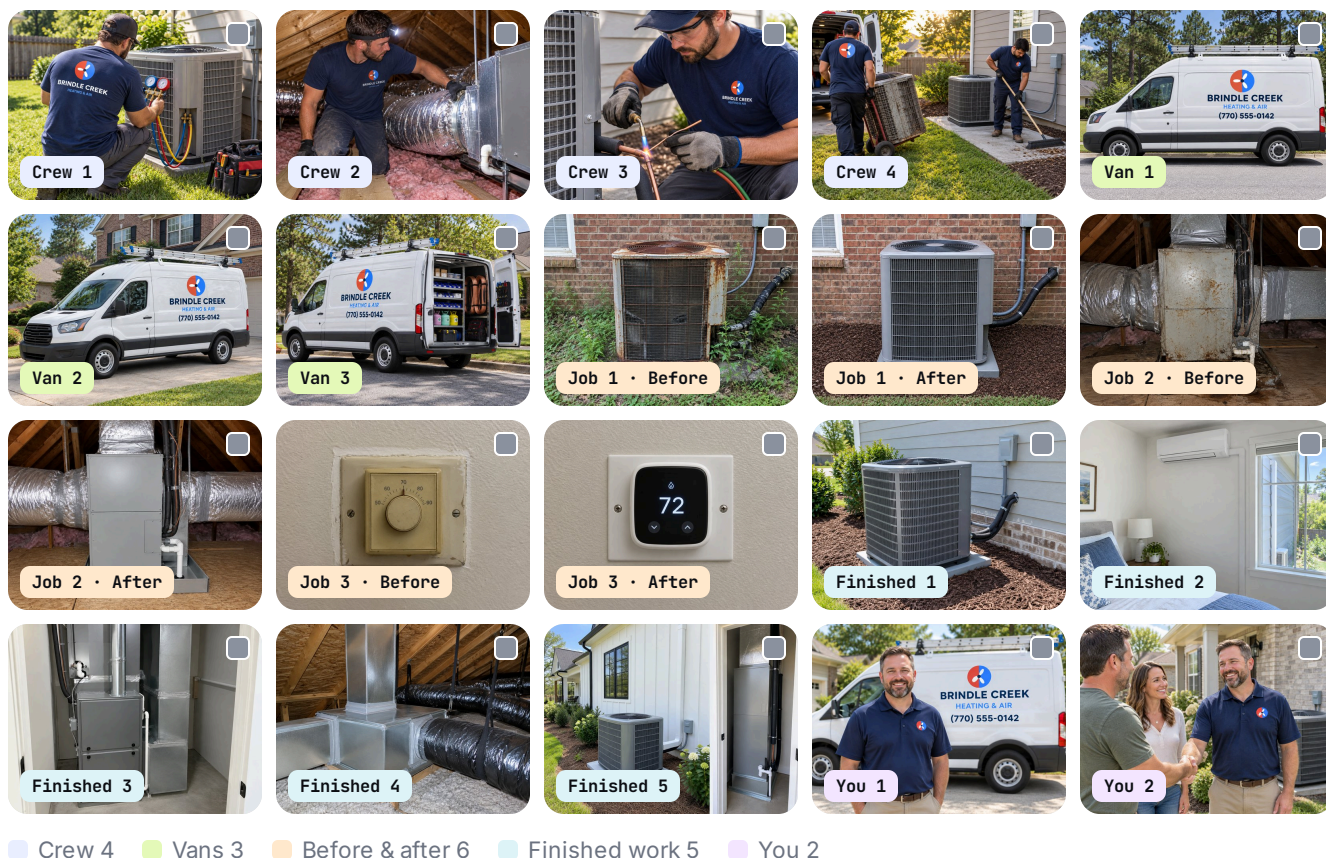

Fig. 15 The twenty-photo shot list, shot for a made-up HVAC company. Same angles, same order. Check off each one as you shoot yours.

- 7 Logo: a square image, your logo, nothing else.
- 8 Cover: your cleanest finished install, or the lettered van from the side.
- 9 Skip stock photos, screenshots, manufacturer logos, and visible house numbers.

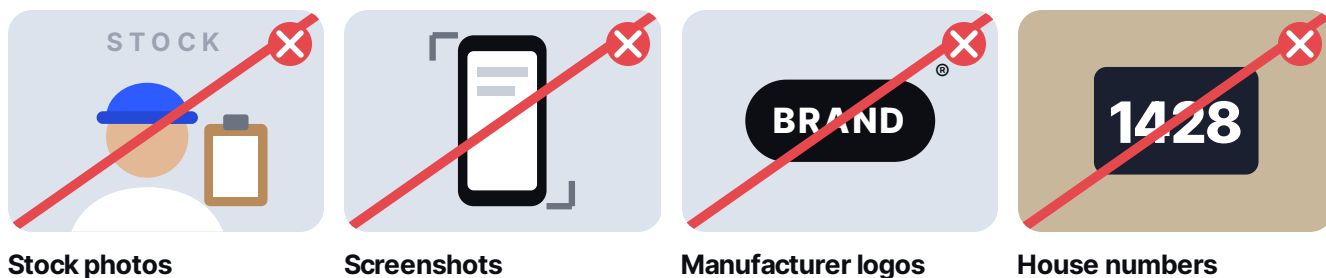

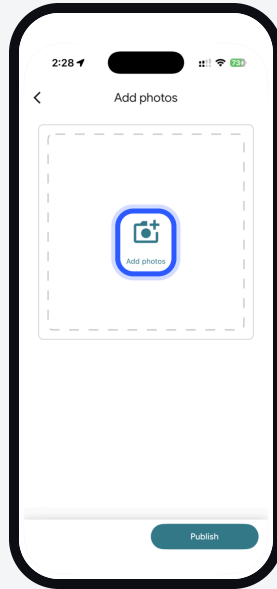

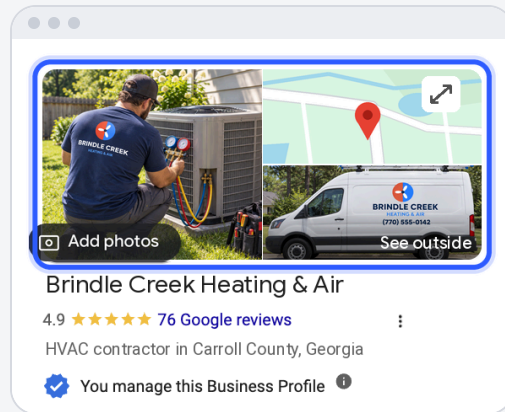

Fig. 17 Four things that don't go on your profile.

Add photo. Start with the crew.

STEPS 7-8

Real job photos lead your listing.

DO THIS NOW

Twenty real photos in that order, plus logo and cover.

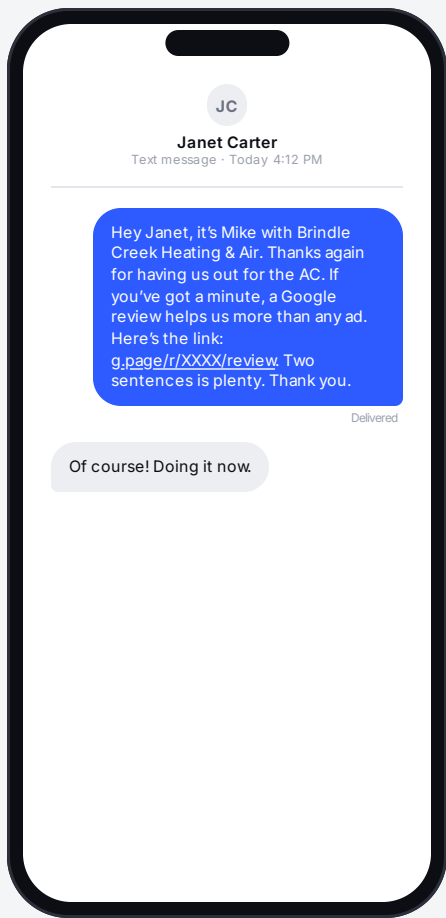

How you know it worked. The first image in your listing's photo strip is one you took.

5

Your first ten reviews

Reviews are the biggest ranking factor you control. A handyman outfit we audited in Kansas City had two reviews on Facebook and none showing on Google after a name change. Nobody asked. Today you ask twenty people and reply to every review you already have.

- 1 Search your company name in Google signed in. In the owner panel, tap "Ask for reviews." In the Maps app, tap "Reviews" and look for "Get more reviews," or use the Search route.
- 2 A box called "Get more reviews" opens with your link. Tap the copy icon next to it. It looks like `g.page/r/XXXXX/review`. Save it.
- 3 Same box: Email, WhatsApp, and Facebook share buttons, and a QR code for invoices and the van.
- 4 Open your last twenty customers. Start with the ones who thanked you.
- 5 Send each one the review text from the tool page with the link. One at a time, no group text.

One at a time

Send it the day the job closes, to one person, with their first name. No group texts.

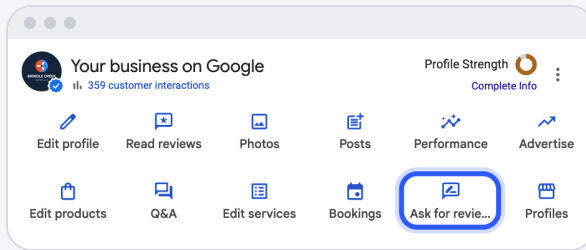

Two or three of twenty

That's a normal first round. Then it's one text per closed job, forever.

Fig. 20 What the customer sees: one short text with your link in it.

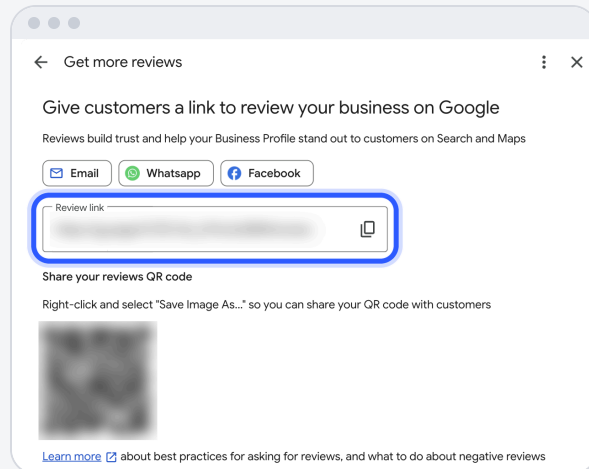

- 6 Open your existing reviews. Reply to every one, oldest first, with the reply script.
- 7 Bad review? Reply once, calm, short, and offer a phone call. Don't argue in public.
- 8 From now on, send the text the day the job closes.

ON YOUR SCREEN

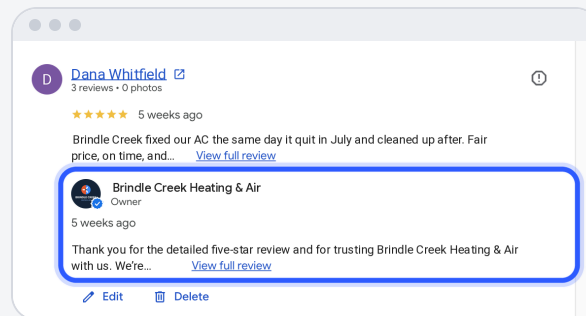

STEP 1

In Google Search, "Ask for reviews" sits right in the owner panel.

STEPS 2-3

Copy the link. Save the QR code for invoices and the van.

STEP 6

Every review gets a reply, even the short ones.

DO THIS NOW

Review link saved. Twenty texts sent. Every existing review replied to.

How you know it worked. The first new review usually lands within a couple of days. Two or three of twenty is normal.

6 Answer Google's questions, set attributes, post once

The old public Q&A section is gone. Google's AI now answers homeowner questions from whatever your profile says. If you never wrote the answer down, it guesses. Google asked a roofer we manage in Douglasville, inside his own profile, "Do you offer free inspections?" His website says yes in the first line. Google still had to ask, because nobody had told the profile. It'll ask you about emergencies and maintenance plans, and a guess costs you the 2am job.

- 1 Tap "Q&A." In the Maps app it says "Appear in more searches by sharing details about your business."
- 2 Google shows one question at a time, like "Do you offer emergency services?" Tap Yes or No. Don't tap Skip. Keep going until it runs out.
- 3 Tap "Edit profile" and find attributes ("From the business," "Service options," or similar). Check only what's true: veteran owned, online estimates, on-site services.
- 4 In your notes, answer these five in a sentence each. Do you charge a diagnostic fee? Licensed and insured? Emergencies? Maintenance plans? Financing?

1
Diagnostic fee?

2
Licensed and insured?

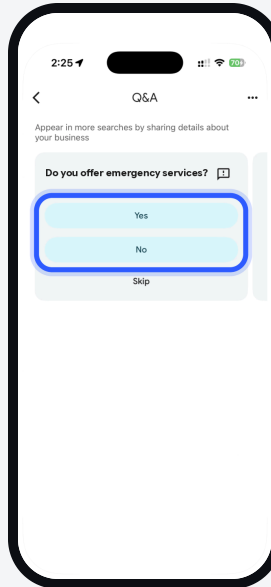

3
Emergencies?

4
Maintenance plans?

5
Financing?

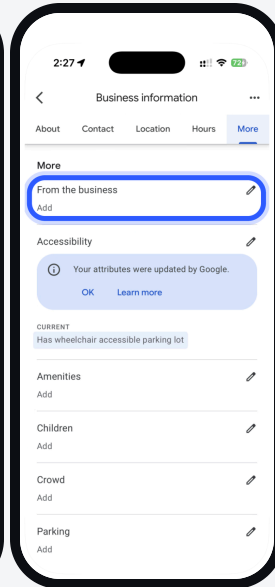

- 5 Put the diagnostic-fee and emergency answers into the matching Day 3 descriptions.
- 6 Back on the buttons, tap "Add update" (in Google Search it's under "Posts"). One photo from Day 4 and three sentences. Where the job was, what you did, one of the five answers.
- 7 Post it. The other four answers are your next four weekly posts.

ON YOUR SCREEN

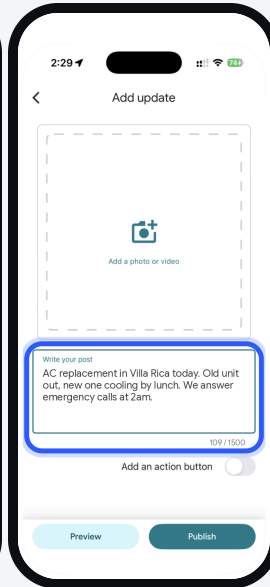

STEP 2

Answer Yes or No. Don't skip.

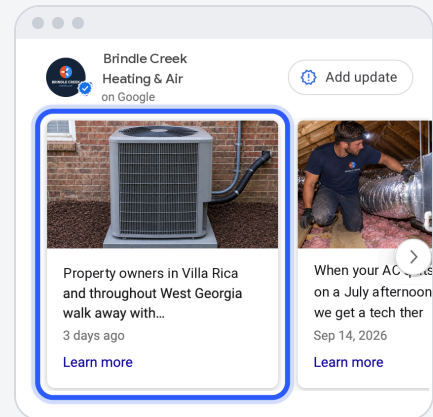

STEP 3

Attributes live under More. Add only what's true.

STEP 6

One photo, three sentences, post.

THE RESULT

Your updates show on the listing with a date.

DO THIS NOW

Every Google question answered. Attributes set. First update posted with a photo. Four more written and waiting.

How you know it worked. The Q&A box says there are no more questions to answer, and your update shows in the Updates area of your listing with today's date.

7 Your starting numbers and the ten-minute week

You can't tell if this worked without a number from before. Google's Performance report shows calls, direction requests, and website clicks from the profile. Most owners have never opened it. Today you write down where you stand, so in 30 days you can see what changed.

- 1 In the Maps app, the "Your business" screen shows Performance with three numbers: Views, Interactions, Searches. Tap "See more."
- 2 Set the range to the last month.
- 3 Write down five numbers with today's date: views, interactions, calls, direction requests, website clicks.

My starting numbers

Fig. 28 Fill this in on Day 7. Look again in 30 days.

- 4 Note the search terms Google lists. That's what people typed.

- 5 Phone check: from someone else's phone, search your name and tap Call. It should ring the phone you carry.

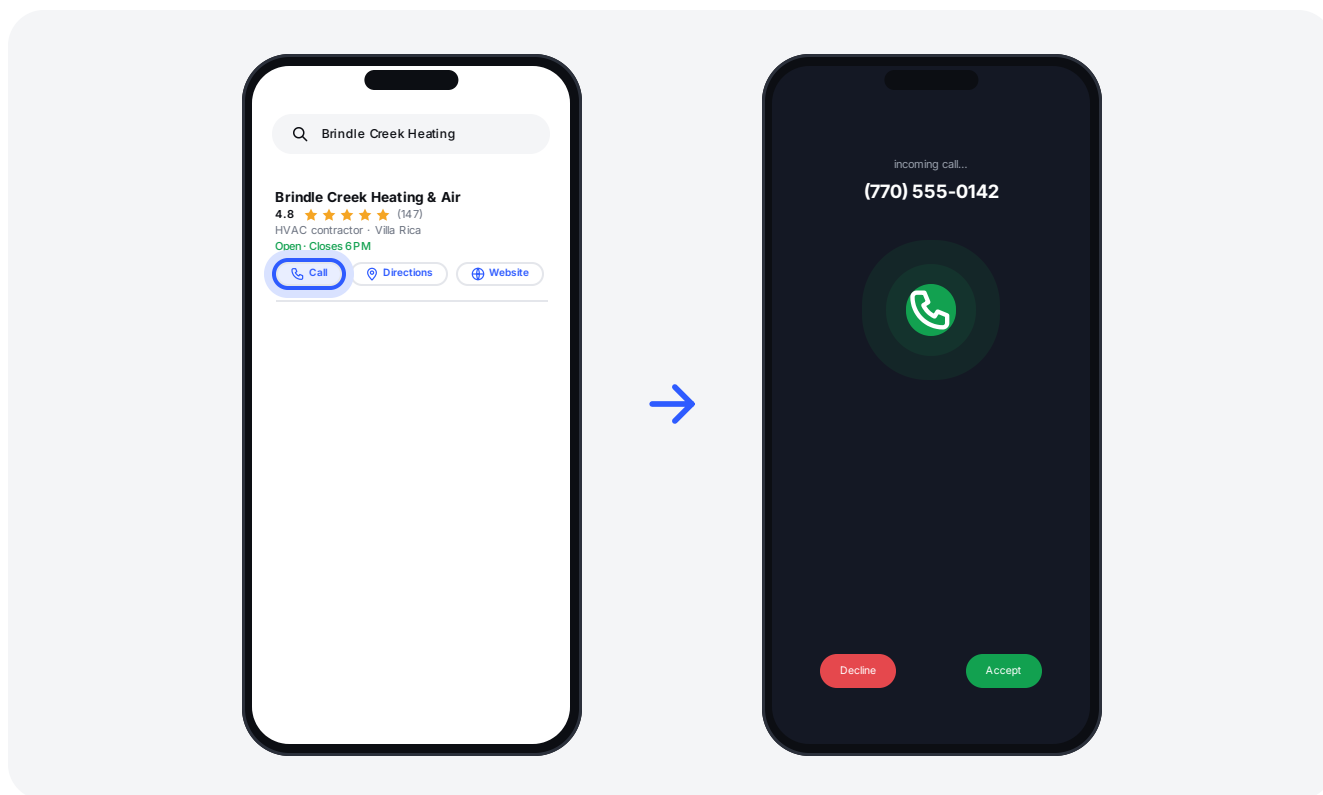

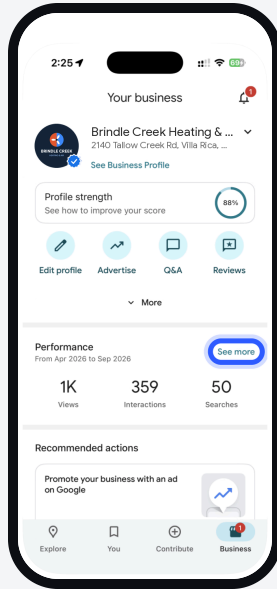

Fig. 30 Tap Call from someone else's phone. The phone in your pocket should ring.

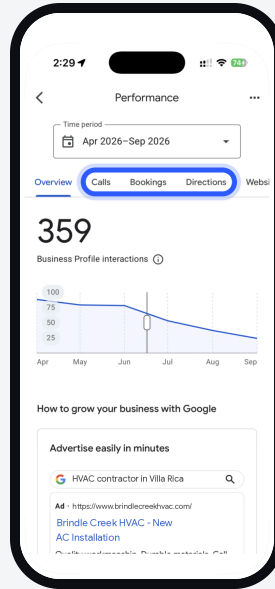

- 6 Put a ten-minute block on your calendar, same day every week.
- 7 In that block: one update with a photo, the review text to every closed job, replies to new reviews. Then glance at Performance.

What has to keep happening

The seven days get the profile right once. Google ranks the profiles that stay right. Five jobs keep it there, and they come due every month.
